A tribe of succulent plants, remarkably characteristic of the hot desert plains of South Africa; their flowers are often very CASE beautiful. The Order is unimportant from an economic 59. point of view but several of its representatives are employed for medicinal purposes in South Africa. Umbellifer Order (Umbelliferae), so called from the arrangement of the flower-stalks in heads or umbels. There are about 1,300 species, all herbaceous and abounding in temperate climates. The products of the group vary much in character. Some species are acrid and poisonous, some secrete gum-resins, others again are aromatic and useful as condiments. Celery, Fennel, Parsnip, Carrot, and Parsley, are all familiar esculents belonging to the Order. Observe leaves of the INDIAN PENNYWORT (Hyd1 oGot ?/l8 asiatica, L.), used in India, internally as a tonic, and externally as a local stimulant, being more especially useful in cutaneous...
