March 27. --From Sandakli to Sitchanli, seven hours: north wind, with ice an inch thick: the road was for the most part hilly and stony, but in some places there were villages and cultivated lands. Sitchanli is in a fertile valley, with many villages around. March 28. -- From Sitchanli to Altun-Tash, nine hours: the country of an undulated form with littlewood. They observed several villages, and in many places scattered fragments of antient buildings, but in no one spot any thing that indicated the site of a large town. At Altun-Tash the snow was lying on the ground. The place takes its name, (signifying golden stone,) from some rocks of a yellow colour in the neighbourhood. It stands on the left bank of the river Pursek, the antient Thymbrius, a branch of the Sangarius. Here were 200 horsemen of the Pasha of Kutaya, who had been reducing a rebellious chieftain, and were in the act of driving away his flocks. March 29. - -From Altun-Tash to Kutaya, nine hours: at first over a swampy plain, which had been inundated by the rains and the melting of the snow upon the hills, then across the Pursek, which between this place and Kutaya forms an S: a high mountain, at the foot of which Kutaya is situated, filling up the northern part of the S. After crossing the Pursek they passed over gentle hills and a pleasant country. Nearly midway was a...
