Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from White Silences: Poems, a Play A Tale In the middle of October, 1918, Katherine Bull, a little girl of fifteen, slipped away into the Great Beyond, leaving this message - written many months before and tucked away among her poems - for a world brought face to face with sorrowing and death: You talk to me about dying, What do you know about dying? It is not dying you mean. you mean Life. There was no struggle, no anticipation; just a sudden flitting away, like a bird let out of its cage. Her last two years were spent at boarding school, and filled so full of joyous interest in all the usual activities, that there was great surprise among her friends to find she had long been writing poems like these. She never talked about such things they said, and She didn't seem different from the rest of us. She was perhaps the most concentrated bit of livingness in the entire school, and so when she went quietly away, with hardly any warning whatsoever, there might have been an emptiness experienced, a sense of loss - a sadness that so much joy of life should be removed from sight. But here the difference, not always noticeable before, was suddenly apparent: she was one for whom you could not mourn! And the wonderful awareness that was hers, deep down under the ordinary current of her life, bloomed out into a sudden radiance and overflowed the hearts of those who were most near to her, leaving no place for ordinary grief. We never knew that death could be like this . the children said to one...
