The Ambassador regretted that the excess of the Bishop of Nancy had not been viewed at the commencement in a different manner. To act upon those provisions of the Code Penal apparently applying in this case, and to which we shall refer later on, certainly appeared doubtful to him, because he did not believe that any French jury, or even a Cour d'Appel, which might take the matter up at the request of the bishop, would have condemned him. On the other hand, however, he deemed the case to be one in every way justifying proceedings against the bishop per appel comme d'abus, and had he been at Paris he would have advised the Prince to call upon the French Government to adopt this measure. A measure, however, which would have been feasible in August and re Integra was no longer possible after a lapse of nearly two months. The bishop had been admonished by his Government; the Imperial Charge d'Affaires had thankfully received the communication relating to it, and, in accordance with the maxim non bis in idem, neither the Imperial nor the French Government could with any show of propriety revert to the affair. Prince Bismarck, however, did not think proper to let the matter rest, and to content himself with the communication thankfully accepted by Count Wesdehlen, as well as with the punishment of the priests who had read the pastoral letter of the Bishop of Nancy...
