Excerpt: . . . profession, was reckoned a deep and learned scholar and divine, a character which his young patient was no less desirous of attaining, and which he afterwards lived to attain. Dr. Randolph died in the year 1765; but Mr. Stevens appears to have transferred all the affectionate friendship he entertained for the father to the son, Dr. Francis Randolph, and to his daughter, Mrs. Gunning, in the house of which most amiable woman he spent a great part of many of the latter summers of his life. That Mr. Stevens was early tinctured with the deepest convictions of religion; and that it formed the consolation of his life in the very precarious state of health, under which he was then labouring, appears from the following letter written from Bristol to a young friend, who appears to have even then profited by his instructions and example....
