By Scott Bittle, Jean Johnson

HarperCollins Publishers Inc, United States, 2009. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Original. 201 x 132 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book. We are on the verge of a crippling energy crisis that could undermine our economy and change our way of life. In Who Turned Out the Lights? , Scott Bittle and Jean Johnson, editors of the award-winning nonpartisan Web site, offer a much-needed reality check. Neither Drill, Baby, Drill nor Every Day is Earth Day is an effective energy policy, and these kinds of ideological roadblocks have left us spinning our wheels for too long. If we don t get our act together and do something now, we ll be scrambling to get the energy we need to make life as we know it possible. But while the topic is serious, learning what you need to know about it doesn t have to be. Featuring chapters entitled Dam It: Hydroelectric Power and Time for the Nuclear Option? and sidebars like This little piggy went to market while this little piggy passed laws , this book will be anything but dry. By applying the same winning approach they used to irreverently explain the federal budget crisis in Where Does the...
