Not illustrated. 1921 Excerpt: . teller s, the commercial credit, and the loan, which have many transactions each day calling for cashier s checks, issue their own checks. On the other hand there are departments, such as the bond, city collection, etc., which have only relatively infrequent need for cashier s checks. In the domestic division of the bank the note teller s department has the function of supplying such departments as these with their requirements. Blank cashier s checks are numbered serially, the numbers being preceded by a key letter which indicates the department issuing them. A rigid control system is placed about the issuance of these checks. The clerk who prepares them is required to account for all numbers delivered to him. They are issued only on the authority of an officer of the bank who retains the stubs of the checks which he signs. These are sent...
